Three and a half centuries ago, the famous Emperor Shahjahan shifted his capital from Agra to Delhi and established the city of Shahjahanabad (now known as Delhi). On the banks of the River Yamuna, he built the majestic Lal Qila (Red Fort). Chandni Chowk was built by his daughter Jahanara as an accompaniment to the Red Fort. It was designed as a large market chowk (square) with a central pool close to the Fort. According to legend, it was the shimmering moonlight on the waters of this pool that gave it the name of Chandni Chowk, or "the moonlit square".

Chandni Chowk today is one of the oldest and busiest markets in Delhi. Chandni Chowk's speciality is the immense variety of its gali (lane) markets and their authentic "Indian-ness." Each gali has something unique about it. From the gali which houses the wholesale textiles market, to the one that glitters with jewellers shops, to the Paranthawali gali... From genuine Indian food, delicacies and sweets of more than a thousand kinds, to sarees with chikan and zaree work.

We are reminiscent of this bygone era of fragrant legends, magnificent traditions, varied flavours, old world courtesy and heart warming hospitality...
